Volunteer tourism and host community voice: a scoping review

A. Pereira

Review of Tourism Practice 6(1) (2020) · doi:10.5555/rtp.2020.0005
SYNTHETIC SAMPLE — not a real study. Generated for SLR Framework Studio.

1. Introduction

This article reports a scoping review of the literature on volunteer tourism and host community voice. It does not report primary data.

2. Method

We searched four databases for studies published between 2000 and 2019, and charted 64 studies against a framework of four conceptions of community voice.

As a review of existing studies, this work collects no new data from residents or operators.

3. Charting the literature

Most of the 64 studies conceptualised host community voice as consultation rather than as decision-making authority.

Only nine studies reported any measure of what residents themselves said they wanted.

Appendix A. Search strategy

Database searches were run on 14 March 2019.
The scoping review covered four databases.
This page is an image with no text layer,
so reading it requires optical character recognition.